

Gallagher's Boxy House

Gallagher's Boxy House, the iconic eatery in Temple Bar, has undergone rebranding. The changes have kept the relaxed atmosphere but a modern approach to the interiors has given a renewed energy to this popular Irish restaurant. Owner Pádraic Óg Gallagher has successfully fused his well known traditional Irish cuisine with fresh modern styles to invigorate a restaurant that has a proud Dublin history and great pride in its produce.

Visiting the Boxy House is like a home coming and customers there can get a real sense of what being Irish is about. The relaxed, warm atmosphere of the restaurant provides a natural setting to settle in and enjoy the finest of locally grown and cooked produce. Pádraic Óg says "We are heading into our 25th anniversary and I wanted to commence the celebrations with infusing a new contemporary look whilst keeping the traditional Irish warmth of the restaurant. Our focus is to give customers a taste of home by serving the best of Irish food into the best of Irish settings. We purposely have arranged tables so that conversations can be joined and for those who wish for privacy we have cosy snugs. We have taken great time and effort working closely with Create Brand Consultants so that the essence of the Boxy House remains unchanged."

The Boxy is the speciality of the restaurant and comes in different forms from potato pancakes to dumplings. Heart warming dishes include Gallagher's Irish Stew, Irish Seafood Chowder, and Butternut Squash & Chickpea Casserole. Having lived his childhood on a farm and family pub in Co Leitrim, Pádraic Óg values the origin of food. Fish, meat and vegetables are carefully sourced from Irish producers, and his innate appreciation of the importance of naturally grown organic food ingredients mixed with uniquely locally inspired dishes is clear.

As President of the Irish Restaurant Association, Pádraic Óg is passionate about culture and food. Gallagher's Boxy House is in the heart of the cultural centre of Dublin, and an urban farm close to the restaurant grows over 100 varieties of potatoes which are being harvested this month – many are being specially grown for the restaurant.

The Boxy House cherishes our traditions while embracing modern Ireland. Oozing warmth and natural charm, it is sure to remain a long standing favourite with both locals and international visitors.
